Greg Lanto Bee

Bee moved to the PNW at a young age and immediately fell in love with the cool summers and the permanent evergreens. Already working in paper-collage artwork, he studied painting, drawing, art history and theory at Clark College. His works now reflect this multi-media background. Formerly working as an assistant curator at Angst Gallery, after suffering from a cerebral aneurysm and hemorrhage in 2014 he had to relearn to walk, write and be human. Still experiencing his new brain composition, Bee currently spends his time working on art.

His collages blend abstract images and recognizable forms. There are often silhouetted figures on paper and figures cut out of the patterns in Bee's artwork. The figure and the surroundings are constantly trading places giving the work a shifting dream like quality. Bee says the "myth, mythology, lore and legend are some of the themes" that influence his work. Often times adjusting known, or creating new mythological characters, symbolism, or attributes. Starting from sketches, and base concepts he then sets color schemes, themes, tone, meaning, while he works. Being able to adjust, and compare different compositions by simply moving a few pieces around is one of the benefits to working in collage. Always changing is the nature of his work.
