

The Spread of Chinese Civilization to Japan, Korea and SouthEast Asia

The Spread of Chinese Civilization to Japan, Korea and SouthEast Asia

- Because of the remarkable durability of Chinese civilization as well as its marvelous technological and economic innovations, other cultures began to imitate China.
- Japan, Korea, and Vietnam were all drawn into China's cultural and political orbit in the postclassical period.
- Each of the three areas interacted with China differently, developing different cultural patterns adapted to local conditions.
- In all of the areas, Buddhism played a significant role in cultural transformation.
- Indian culture was filtered through China and passed on to these other regions.
- Buddhism also provided links between Korea and Japan.

Japan: The Imperial Age: – Intro

- Chinese cultural influence in Japan peaked during the seventh and eighth centuries C.E.
- 646 the Japanese emperor introduced administrative reforms, the Taika reforms, intended to realign the Japanese government along Chinese models.
 - Court etiquette, diplomacy, historical writing, and Confucian philosophy became mandatory aspects of the Japanese court.
- Buddhism swept into Japan.
 - The effort to merge Chinese and indigenous elements was often uneasy.
 - The peasantry reworked Buddhism, merging it with worship of traditional Japanese nature spirits, the kami.

Japan: The Imperial Age – Crisis at Nara and the Shift to Heian (Kyoto)

- The Taika reforms were intended to create an emperor with absolute powers assisted by a Chinese-style bureaucracy and supported by an army of conscripted peasants.
- Opposition to the reforms came from aristocratic families and from Buddhist monks.
 - Buddhist monks had become so powerful in Japan that one of their number actually conspired to take over the throne in the 760s C.E.
- Imperial government under constant threat of Buddhist disruption, the emperor moved the capital from Nara to Heian (Kyoto).
- Buddhists, forbidden to build monasteries within the new capital, settled for constructing monasteries on the hills that surrounded the city.
- Counterbalancing the growing influence of the Buddhists, emperors restored the powers of the aristocratic families, reinforced their traditional control of the imperial government, and permitted them to build up their control of rural estates.
- Attempts to create a conscripted army were abandoned and military organization was left to members of the rural aristocracy.

Japan: The Imperial Age – Ultracivilized: Court Life in the Heian Era

- Attempts to expand imperial centralization were abandoned at Heian, the imperial court produced a refined culture that set standards for aristocratic life.
- Court established strict rules of social conduct and a hierarchy of status that defined social relationships.
 - The elite in Heian lived in a complex of palaces and gardens.
 - Poetry was the favorite literary expression at Heian.
 - Women participated in the production of poetry and other forms of literature.

Japan: The Imperial Age – The Decline of Imperial Power

- By the middle of the ninth century C.E., the imperial court was dominated by the Fujiwara family.
- Aristocratic families competed with Buddhist monasteries for control of land around the capital. Both groups sought to frustrate imperial reforms and limit the power of the emperors.
- Gradually the secular elite within the imperial court at Heian and the Buddhist monasteries began to cooperate.
- Both groups came into conflict with the growing regional influence of local lords outside the region of Heian.

Japan: The Imperial Age – The Rise of the Provincial Warrior Elite

- In the countryside, elite families also sought to monopolize land and labor.
- These families were able to carve out private precincts ruled by house governments.
 - In each local precinct, the elite family in control constructed small fortresses to house the local lord and his military retainers.
 - The warrior leaders, or bushi, exercised private jurisdiction within their lands and enforced their rule through private armies of mounted troops, or samurai.
- As the imperial government became increasingly weak, it began to hire local lords and their armed troops to provide for law and order, even in the regions near the capital.
 - Supported by peasants, who supplied the bushi and samurai with food, local warriors began to emerge as a separate and powerful class.
 - Warfare between groups of samurai was often based on heroic combat between champions.
 - The samurai developed a distinctive code of conduct based on honor in war and requiring ritual suicide for disgrace.
 - The rise of the samurai frustrated any attempts for the emergence of a free peasantry in Japan.
 - Treated as the property of the warrior class, peasants turned to salvationist strains of Buddhism, notably the Pure Lands sect.
 - Artisans were concentrated in the in the fortress towns.

Korea: Between China and Japan – Introduction

- Chinese culture influenced Korea more heavily than any other region, even though indigenous dynasties continued to rule the peninsula for much of the postclassic period.
- The people who inhabited the Korean peninsula were different ethnically than those who came to consider themselves Chinese.
- In 109 B.C.E., a Han dynasty emperor conquered the Korean kingdom of Choson and settled Chinese colonies in Korea.
- These Chinese colonies provided the conduit through which Chinese culture was transmitted.
- As Chinese control of Korea weakened, the indigenous Koguryo established an independent kingdom in the northern part of the peninsula. Koguryo contested control of the peninsula with two smaller kingdoms, Silla and Paekche.
- In all three kingdoms, Buddhism supplied the key links to Chinese culture. In Koguryo, rulers attempted to institute the Chinese examination system, Chinese writing, and a bureaucracy.
- Opposition to Sinification by the Korean aristocracy led to the failure of the plan.

Korea: Tang Alliances and the Conquest of Korea

- The Tang emperors conquered Korea for China for the second time.
- In the process of conquest, the Tang allied themselves with Silla in order to defeat the other two dynasties.
- When Silla proved resistant to external control, the Tang emperors agreed to recognize the Silla monarch as a vassal in return for the payment of tribute.
- The Chinese withdrew their armies from Korea in 668 C.E., leaving the kings of Silla as independent rulers.

Korea: Sinification: The Tributary Link

- Under the kings of Silla and the succeeding Koryo dynasty (918 C.E. to 1392 C.E.), Sinification was thorough.
- The Silla rulers intentionally modeled their government after the Tang dynasty.
- The tribute system was critical to the process of cultural exchange.
- Tribute missions offered access to Chinese learning, art, and manufactured goods.
- Scholars from Korea were able to study at Chinese schools and Buddhist monasteries.

Korea: The Sinification of Korean Elite Culture

- The aristocracy of the Korean kingdom of Silla clustered about the capital city of Kumsong.
- There they became immersed in Chinese culture, including Confucianism.
- Despite the interest in imitating all things Chinese, the Korean elite preferred Buddhism to Confucianism.
- The Koreans learned the initial secrets of pottery from the Chinese, but Korean artisans produced masterworks that often rivaled the efforts of their teachers.

Korea: Civilization for the Few

- Sinification was largely limited in Korea to the elite, who monopolized most political offices and dominated social life.
- Much of Korea's trade involved supplying luxuries for the elite.
- To support the importation of luxuries, Korea exported raw materials.
- Artisans remained in the lower ranks of Korean society. Korea failed to develop a distinctive merchant class.
- The lower ranks of Korean society existed to serve the elite.
- Salvationist Buddhism promised an afterlife as a release from the drudgery of service to the Korean aristocracy.

Korea: Koryo Collapse, Dynastic Renewal

- Periodic rebellions against the Korean government and aristocrats eventually weakened both the Silla and Koryo regimes.
- Following the Mongol invasion of Korea in 1231, the Yi dynasty was founded in 1392. It survived in much the same format as its predecessors until 1910.

Between China and Southeast Asia:

The Making of Vietnam – Intro

- The Chinese were interested in the annexation of Vietnam in order to control the rice production of the Red River valley.
- The Vietnamese were less conciliatory toward the adoption of Chinese culture than other peoples.
- The first attempts at conquest during the Qin dynasty resulted in the establishment of trade between China and Vietnam but no political unification.
- Aspects of Vietnamese culture, such as language, household formation, local autonomy, dress, and the higher status of women, differed significantly from Chinese patterns.

Between China and Southeast Asia: The Making of Vietnam – Conquest and Sinification

- The Han dynasty emperors were responsible for the conquest of the Red River valley.
- By 111 B.C.E., Chinese troops and administrators were present in Vietnam.
- Initially the Viet elite cooperated with its conquerors and entered the bureaucratic administration of local government.
- The Viet elite undertook Confucian education and underwent the Chinese examination system as a means of qualifying for official posts in the government.
- With the introduction of Chinese agricultural techniques, Vietnamese agriculture became highly productive.
- Adoption of Chinese military techniques gave the Vietnamese advantages over the neighboring cultures of Southeast Asia.

Between China and Southeast Asia: The Making of Vietnam – Roots of Resistance

- Chinese cultural importations failed to make an impression on the Vietnamese peasantry.
- Vietnamese resistance to political inclusion within the Chinese empire led to rebellions.
- The most famous of the rebellions occurred in 39 C.E. under the Trung sisters.

Between China and Southeast Asia: The Making of Vietnam – Winning Independence and Continuing Chinese Influences

- Separated from China by substantial distance and geographical barriers, Vietnam was difficult for the Chinese to govern.
- Whenever political chaos existed in China between dynasties, the Vietnamese were quick to reestablish their independence.
- Following the fall of the Tang, the Vietnamese achieved separation from China in 939 C.E.
- Until their conquest by the French in the 19th century, the Vietnamese were able to stave off foreign invasion.
- Chinese cultural influences did not end with the restoration of Vietnamese political independence.
- Vietnamese dynasties after 980 C.E. continued to imitate the Chinese bureaucracy, examination system, and the scholar-gentry.
- The Vietnamese administrators were never as powerful as their Chinese counterparts because their power did not extend effectively to the village level.
- The competition with Buddhist monks also limited the power of the nascent Vietnamese scholar-gentry.
- Failure to establish a strong, centralized administrative network weakened many Vietnamese dynasties.

Between China and Southeast Asia: The Making of Vietnam – Drive to the South

- Vietnam continued to enjoy advantages over other rivals in Indochina.
- Their main adversaries were the Chams and Khmers, who resided in the southern portions of the region.
- The Vietnamese remained less interested in the hill peoples, whom they regarded as savages.
- Between the 11th and 18th centuries, the Vietnamese drove the Chams from their lands in the south.
- Following the defeat of the Chams, the Vietnamese expanded their territories at the expense of the Khmers.
- By the eighteenth century, the Vietnamese had successfully taken much of the land surrounding the Mekong River delta.

Between China and Southeast Asia: The Making of Vietnam –Expansion and Division

- As southern expansion continued, the central government in Hanoi had increasing difficulties establishing their authority in the south.
- By the 16th century, a rival dynasty (the Nguyen) emerged to challenge the northern Trinh dynasty.
- For two centuries, the war between the Trinh and Nguyen continued.
- Internal war weakened the Vietnamese when it became necessary to face an external threat from European imperialism.

Global Connections: In the Orbit of China: The East Asian Corner and the Global System

- Chinese culture spread to the sedentary agricultural populations of Korea, Japan, and Vietnam in the first millennium C.E. Chinese writing, bureaucratic organization, religion, and art all made impressions on the indigenous cultures.
- In general, the local elites of the three regions actively sought to emulate Chinese models. Differences within the three areas resulted in divergent outcomes and alternative mixes of the indigenous and the imported. China was able to establish direct control over Korea.
- In Vietnam, Chinese influences mingled with Indian cultural contributions. Only Japan remained permanently independent of China and, thus, was able to selectively adapt Chinese models to Japanese needs.
- In East Asia, as a whole, cultural exchanges took place in isolation from the rest of the civilized world.